ROCK & ROLL

COMICS

REVOLUTIONARY Comments

It's been a long time coming, and now it's finally arrived: the first issue of Rock N' Roll Comics! Ever since its inception, there has always been a strong tie between rock n' roll and comic books. A large reason for this connection is the fact that both are used by young people as a way to escape from the boredom, and fears of growing up. Let's face it, school is boring, and there's not much that young people can do about it, they are trapped there. Comics are a world within themselves, an exciting, adventurous world, where kids are king. The same can be said for the world of rock n' roll.

There have been many instances in the past when the paths of rock and comics 'crossed'. In 1969, after the success of the Monkees, Don Kirshner decided he wanted to put together a new group, a group which wouldn't talk back or give him any arguments! So he got together with Archie comics and put together the fictional Archies. A few years later, Marvel put together a rock album based on Spiderman's adventures. A few years after that, Marvel Super Special #1 came out, featuring Kiss. Although the names were the same, and the book was lavishly illustrated, it wasn't really about Kiss at all! It was a made-up story, that turned the members of Kiss into superheroes. As stupid as it was, Kiss fans ate it up, making it one of the best-selling Marvel books ever. A second try (Marvel Super Special #5), proved to be the last. Why?

Maybe due to the total lameness of the first issue. It was a great idea, poorly executed. "Punk", a New York based fan magazine seemed to finally have the right idea in the late '70's. They did fantastic comics about rock n' roll, and even got the Ramones, Debbie Harry, and others to star in photo comics. Unfortunately, "Punk" magazine was short-lived.

Various mentions of comic characters in rock songs would suggest large crossover potential: Charlie Brown by the Coasters, Snoopy vs. The Red Baron by the Royal Guardsmen, Sunshine Superman by Donovan, Iron Man by Black Sabbath, Magneto And Titanium Man by Paul McCartney, and Precious by the Pretenders, which mentions Howard The Duck. In 1987, Joe Satriani's album, "Surfing With The Alien", featured a picture of the Silver Surfer on the cover. Other groups, specifically heavy metal oriented ones, have featured comic book influenced covers, such as Meatloaf's "Bat Out Of Hell", by Rich Corben. Many of the metal groups themselves, starting with Kiss, have borrowed the superhero look with their costumes and makeup. These groups also created mascots which were straight out of the horror comics of the 50's, such as Iron Maiden's Eddie, Motley Crue's Allister Fiend, and Dio's Murray.

The merchandise which these bands were producing had a definite comic book flair to them, including Def Leppard's most famous t-shirt, which featured a comic book called "Women Of Doom".

For those of you who agree that rock is not something to be taken too seriously, we plan on making satire an important part of Rock N' Roll Comics. In the past, this idea has been largely ignored, but we plan to rectify this. Mad, Cracked, and even National Lampoon have all but ignored this possibility. In order to satirize something, you have to understand it. You have to be a fan to make fun, otherwise it just comes off as mean spirited, and that's not funny. Our intention is to fill that void. Each issue will feature a different group. There will be a factual, non-authorized, retelling of their origin, and the group history. There will be a satirical story, like the one in this issue. Plus, there'll be regular features, like Stan Back. And, if we get fan support (which we really need, and appreciate greatly), then we will be able to do more and different things, in the same genre. There is virtually no limit to the possibilities, and we intend to leave no rock unrolled!

I want to state my support for American freedom.

I believe in the American Constitution and its Bill of Rights. I object to the attack on freedom of expression being mounted by groups attacking rock, rap and pop music. I oppose pressure tactics being used by groups like the PMRC and Decency In Media to get the FCC to remove music the leaders of these groups dislike from the air.

I oppose laws -- like the one in San Antonio, Texas -- that prevent some people from attending concerts city officials don't care for. I object to the arrest of an 18-year old store clerk in Calloway, Florida for selling a rap record. And I object to the arrest of bandleader Jello Biafra in California for selling material "harmful to minors" when that material was a reproduction in his album of a piece of art shown in gallery exhibits all over the world.

I may not like every form of music, but I believe it all has a right to exist. That freedom is what America is about.
